MANY INSTRUMENTS and switches confront Mrs. Boice and her pupil as they go through checklist in the dual control cockpit.

NAVIGATION is an extremely important part of flying as any pilot who has been lost will testify. Mrs. Boice gives her students a thorough briefing before each training flight

Gave Up Art for Wild Blue Yonder

PHERE'S a housewife in Ramsey, N. J., who's up in the air practically all of the time! But t's not domestic problems that cause the ups and downs for Mrs. Jean Boice. She's the only woman instrument flying instructor in New Jersey. As her own boss, Mrs. Boice leads students through a strict training routine at nearby Teterboro airport.

Most of her students are businessmen who own their own planes and need instrument flying for added safety. Once under Mrs. Boice's wing, the student learns about maps, charts and compass work, so necessary for blind flying. Then she checks her pupil out in a dual control training plane-usually a Cessna 140. Finally, after hours under her watchful eyes, the student is ready for a solo flight.

The attractive young brunette instructor has been a pilot since 1941. Before being bitten by the flying bug, Mrs. Boice was seriously pursuing an art career. She studied advertising design and art at the Art Students League in New York City. She is now one of the nation's leading women pilots, and many of her former students are commercial fliers.

There's no rest at the end of the day for Mrs. Boice. At home many chores await her. Dinner must be started, her two young sons, Alan and Gerald, may need help with homework. What does her husband do? You guessed it. He's a pilot for Eastern Airlines heavy flying schedule and many demanding household duties, Mrs. Boice finds the time to relax with her airlines pilot husband and two young sons, Alan and Gerald.

A CHESS GAME occupies Mrs. Boice and her sons while she manages some spare moments at home. After dinner she may be called upon to solve a difficult mathematics problem.

ENGINE THEORY is a must in any successful flight training program. Mrs. Boice, left, emphasizes this as she points out the various parts of the engine to one of her students.

FLYING INVOLVES a great many safety regulations and precautions that Mrs. Boice observes carefully. Here she makes sure the aircraft is securely anchored after a'flight.

You are cordially invited to come in and help us celebrate our 45th year in business at 216 East State St., Jacksonville. Enjoy delicious food . . . Register for prizes.

SCOREBOARD

By HARRY GRAYSON NEA Sports Editor

NEW YORK-(NEA)-Even a kid like Joey Jay, the Milwaukee Braves' big right-hander, reminds you that time can change things. He is only 22 now and is probably the best pitcher, along with Warren Spahn, Fred Haney has.

The first time we saw Jay he was throwing in front of the Milwaukee dugout before a night game at the Polo Grounds with the New York Giants in 1953 and Charley Grimm was the Braves'

"Who is that big guy?" somebody asked Grimm

"The name is Jay . . . Joey Jay." Charley mused. "He is the first Little Leaguer who ever made the majors. He's a bonus kid. All he has is Cadillacs. They used to pay money for bonus players, but he is starting a new trend. He gets Cadillacs."

Grimm isn't with the Braves any more and the Giants are in San Francisco and the Polo Grounds is empty,

And Jay has matured to the point where you forget he was a bonus player or a Little League graduate, Right now his fine change-up curve, setting up a fast ball that his 6-5, 225-pound frame makes bum, has taken care of National League batters to the extent that his earned run average is only 1.40.

Joey had a 6-4 record when he strained his arm against the Reds and had to skip a turn or two. His losses came in 1-0, 2-1, 3-1 and

His big regret is that he ever was around the Braves that 1953 summer. It is, you figure, an easy statement for somebody to make who took down $40,000 but Joey-he prefers being called Joe-still makes sense. It nearly cost him his career, he points

"I sat around for two solid years doing nothing but taking up space on the bench and eating all the food they could cook," the big guy says. "Lazy? You have no idea how lazy you can get. I was a single kid just out of high school-heck, I got my diploma from high school and put on a Braves uniform.

"With that bonus rule, they had to keep me two years. If I wasn't eating a full course dinner, I was sitting down chomping up peanuts like an elephant and drinking cokes to swell me up. I was nothing but a drag. I wasn't learning much, I wasn't doing much except eating. I came close to ruining myself for good."

The Braves farmed Joey out to Toledo in 1955. Married and more mature, he began to learn his trade. Last year at Wichita he won 17. The Braves brought him up. This spring he was terrible in exhibition games and had a poor start as a regular season relief man. Then on June 13, Haney, in pitching trouble, decided to give Jay a start! The big kid turned in a 2-0 shutout over the Cards and he has never stopped burning the ball in since.

Jay could always throw. As a Little Leaguer at Manchester, Conn., he threw a fast ball that hit a batter in the side, breaking ribs. The hurt boy's mother started a one-woman campaign to force Jay to play right field so nobody else's son would have to face his hard one.

"I would say," Manager Haney muses, "that right now he is making up for every Milwaukee check he has signed since coming around. I mean the meal checks, too. I hear some of them were as big as his

Jay could be the big factor in the National League race down the stretch and even with that big bank account he realizes how close the bonus rule came to ruining what now appears to be a

Health Department, the few grains of pollen that have sifted down for microscopic examination are just teasers. The sniffler who goes around at this stage of the season, telling friends he has hay fever, is looking for premature sympathy. He is something of an im-

When the pollen moves in-and case-hardened, seasoned hay fever campaigners will tell you there is nothing to fear before Aug. 20-there will be no need to blow whistles or ring the bells. The hay fever brotherhood knows, instinctively, when to can tell within a matter of minutes when the Big Sneeze will invade Central Illinois. He wrote with such understanding about the malady, that the Journalistic profession was left without an official spokesman when he re-

That is why we are unfurling the banner of the afflicted—to preserve the hay fever season for hay fever victims. The hypochondriacs and imposters have no business in the Big Sneeze Fraternity.

Premature release dates encourage snifflers and snufflers and those who succumb to powers of suggestion. Reddened eyes or itchy noses do not add up to hay fever.

Come Aug. 20, the shock troops will go into action. It requires several hundred pollen grains per cubic yard to touch off the reaction. From then on until Sept. 20, or a few days thereafter, enough unharnessed power exists throughout the Illinois ragweed belt to elevate the largest U.S. Satellite into orbits never before dreamed.

The Case Of The Pink Feather

A few years ago Sigmund Spaeth conducted a radio program in which he acted as "the tune detective." If someone had expanded the role with sufficient aid from the Air Force project on "unidentified flying objects," possibly the earth would have been protected from the terror (and mirth) generated by the current popular song about "The Purple People Eater."

Public authorities in such cases probably need some of the kind of intelligent, purposeful cooperation which came from Mrs. Mary Van Der Kruvs in Melborne, Australia. Tired of having her white chickens stolen, she dyed them pink, and this enabled police to track down the culprit and an accomplice. They found

Patrons of the Stolte tavern, popular rural spot locate on Highway 96 three miles west of New Canton, have been stumped during the last three months trying to identify a most peculiar "thingmajig." There's been plenty of guesses, but most people simply say "It's past me!"

Mrs. Viola Stolte holds it for a photograph. It's made of very heavy steel, probably nickel steel. The two leaves are full of holes of various sizes and the inner section, made of slightly heavier steel has rounded apertures nearly bored through the metal.

The center section measures eight inches deep and five and a half inches wide. The old "whatyamacallit" measures 161/2 inches wide.

Engraved on the back are these words: Konseal Apparatus, J. M. Grosvenor & Co., Boston, Agents for America.

It was found by Truman Gorton of Kinderhook when he was helping demolish an old mercantile building in Barry. He gave it to the Stoltes, who have quite a collection of relics of byegone days around the place.

The device shows high workmanship. Some observers believe it is a guage of some sort. A few think it could have been used to measure the diameter and thickness of coins but more lean to the idea that it was a candlemaker's gauge. Anyone knowing what the thing is invited to communicate with Mrs. Stolte or Cecil Tendick of the Journal Courier.

SELL 1,400 GALLONS OF BURGOO AT WINCHESTER

Clifford Allan, Jr. was soup maker for the traditional American Legion Burgoo held Thursday at Winchester. Festivities got underway with a parade in the morning and closed with a dance starting at 10:30 in the evening. Burgoo was sold throughout the day by serving and container. The 1,400 gallon on hand held out until 7 o'clock in the evening. Many people buy gallons and freeze for later use and Winchester burgoo has an established national reputation. A portion of the crowd waiting in the early evening is shown above. The lower picture shows Allan stirring at one of the massive kettles used to cook the concoction.
